My wife is a psychologist. While that likely tells you more about me than it does about her —my poor attempt at humor—I share this because I’ve benefitted immensely from her guidance and discipline. Over the years, insights from her profession have shaped how I lead and serve as a parent and partner, in my community, and through NVSBC. One psychological theory that resonates with me is Acceptance and Commitment Therapy (ACT). While you can Google or ask AI for details, here’s why it matters for you as part of the small business community in 2026.

ACT emphasizes several powerful ideas and ultimately aims to build psychological flexibility, allowing people to thrive under stress.

- Changing your relationship with thoughts and feelings—accepting unwanted thoughts and feelings as natural responses to uncertainty rather than resisting or trying to control them.
- Cognitive diffusion – learning to see thoughts as words/ images, not absolute truths, loosening their power.

- Committed action—setting goals and taking concrete steps guided by your values, even when discomfort arises.

Sound familiar? It’s exactly what many successful entrepreneurs do every day. Small Business leadership & Government contracting can be frustrating and invoke paralyzing anxiety, leading to delayed action. But accepting the stress and anxiety brought on by the current marketplace will allow you to commit to action by reconnecting with your core values and organizations’ mission and letting them guide your actions. Even when the process feels overly burdensome, keep submitting proposals, networking, seeking mentorship, and refining your business plan regardless of

NVSBC Launches Expanded Finance Symposium for 2026, Marking a New Era in Capital Readiness

The National Veteran Small Business Coalition (NVSBC) is kicking off the new year with a major evolution in its financial education programming: the inaugural NVSBC Finance Symposium, a broadened, comprehensive successor to the 2025 Veterans Access to Capital Symposium. The shift reflects the rapidly changing financial landscape facing business owners as they navigate both federal contracting and commercial growth opportunities.

A Broader Mandate for a More Complex Market

While the 2025 Veterans Access to Capital Symposium focused on helping veteran entrepreneurs understand traditional financing—loans, lines of credit, and SBA-backed instruments—the 2026 Finance Symposium widens the aperture significantly. This year's event brings together lenders, private equity leaders, and financial strategists to address the full spectrum of capital challenges facing GovCon firms.

The expanded agenda reflects a key reality: businesses are increasingly operating in hybrid markets where federal contracting, commercial innovation, and private investment intersect. The new symposium is designed to meet that moment.

From “Access to Capital” to “Financial Strategy”

The 2025 event centered on one core question: How do veteran entrepreneurs secure the capital they need to start or grow their businesses?

The 2026 symposium asks a more strategic one: How do business owners build resilient, long-term financial architectures that support scaling, compliance, and competitiveness in federal markets? Key differences include:

New Tracks for a New Era

The 2026 symposium introduces several new content tracks designed to meet the needs of the GovCon business ecosystem. Below are a few highlights:

- GovCon Financial Readiness: Staying financially resilient in challenging times; Coordinating personal & business finances without confusion; How to build your dream advisory team.
- Investment & Growth Capital: Know when it's time to ask for capital; Exploring private equity, venture capital, and strategic investment.
- Acquisition & Exit Planning: Buy a business: entrepreneurship through acquisition; Plan your exit strategy and adjust along the way.
- Accounting & Tax Planning: Master accounting and tax planning like a pro.

A More Interactive, Hands-On Format

Unlike the 2025 symposium, which leaned heavily on panel discussions, the 2026 Finance Symposium incorporates:

- Financial how-to's for participating businesses
- Master classes, Fireside chats, and Panel discussions
- Matched networking sessions connecting firms with lenders and financial & GovCon professionals

This shift toward applied learning mirrors the needs expressed by NVSBC members, many of whom are seeking not just information but actionable guidance. The Finance Symposium is designed to ensure entrepreneurs are not just accessing capital but using it strategically to compete and thrive.

A Strengthened Platform for GovCon Entrepreneurs

The 2026 Finance Symposium represents more than a rebranding effort; it signifies a substantive shift in how support is delivered to the nation's GovCon business sector.

By transitioning from a capital-access event to a comprehensive financial strategy symposium, NVSBC is affirming a broader and more strategic commitment: to equip entrepreneurs with the analytical frameworks, financial tools, and high-value relationships necessary to build sustainable, scalable enterprises within an increasingly competitive federal marketplace.

Finance Fundamentals for Federal Contracts: What Every Business Owner Must Know

Securing a federal contract is a major opportunity, but financial readiness is non-negotiable. Start with strategic planning and budgeting that accounts for long payment cycles under the Prompt Payment Act, which generally allows 30 days for invoice settlement. Build cash flow models that anticipate delays and consider financing options like progress or performance-based payments to maintain liquidity throughout the project.

Pricing is equally critical. Under FAR Part 15, contracting officers must determine prices to be “fair and reasonable,” often requiring detailed cost analysis if competition or commercial pricing data is insufficient. For awards above $2.5 million, certified cost or pricing data may be mandatory, so document your estimating methods and maintain transparency. Align your accounting system with GAAP and, when applicable, Cost Accounting Standards (CAS), ensuring segregation of direct and indirect costs and readiness for audits under SF 1408.

Finally, compliance extends beyond invoicing. Use platforms like PIEE/WAWF for accurate electronic submissions and prepare for Incurred Cost Submissions within six months of fiscal year-end. Explore tax advantages such as the R&D credit, which now requires project-level detail, and implement robust risk management tied to FAR Part 46 quality standards. In short, financial readiness, budget discipline, compliant pricing, system adequacy, and proactive tax planning, is the cornerstone of success in the federal marketplace.

Building Bridges: Celebrating Our Fellowship Program Sponsors

The NVSBC Fellowship Program represents more than training. It's about building lasting connections that transform veteran small business owners into confident, capable competitors in the federal marketplace. This nine-month intensive journey pairs emerging VOSBs and SDVOSBs with established GovCon leaders, creating regional ecosystems of support that extend far beyond program completion.

We're honored to recognize the sponsors whose commitment makes this transformative program possible.

Boeing serves as our Presenting Sponsor, demonstrating exceptional leadership in advancing veteran entrepreneurship. Their support enables us to expand our reach across nine regional locations, ensuring that veteran business owners facing barriers to federal contracting have access to the mentorship and resources they need to succeed.

Our Regional Sponsors – PilieroMazza PLLC, M&T Bank, Bank of America, and 1DigitalSpace LLC – each play a vital role in strengthening local veteran business communities. Their investment allows us to deliver both in-person and virtual experiences that bring Senior Fellows and Fellows together, fostering the personal connections that make our program uniquely effective.

Through this partnership, we're able to provide a tailored curriculum covering procurement strategy, business readiness, and financial management – essential knowledge delivered through the authentic guidance of those who've navigated these waters successfully. Senior Fellows, drawn from our network of accomplished VOSB and SDVOSB owners and GovCon experts, share not just their expertise but their personal experiences, challenges, and hard-won insights.

For Fellows, many with established businesses but limited federal contracting experience, this program opens doors that might otherwise remain closed. The relationships built here create support networks that persist long after the program concludes, knitting together a stronger, more resilient veteran business community nationwide.

To Boeing, PilieroMazza, Bank of America, 1DigitalSpace, and M&T Bank: your sponsorship doesn't just fund a program, it invests in the futures of veteran entrepreneurs and strengthens the entire federal marketplace. Thank you for believing in this mission and standing with those who have served. For those interested in sponsoring a Fellowship Cohort, please feel free to contact me directly at Adelaide. kahn@nvsbc.org.

Resilience Is the New Differentiator: How Small Veteran-Owned Businesses Compete with Big Primes

Small businesses often assume resilience is something only large primes can afford. They picture teams of planners, thick binders, and expensive consultants. In reality, resilience has become one of the most practical competitive advantages a veteran-owned small business can develop.

In today's federal contracting environment, buyers don't just evaluate capability, they evaluate reliability. When disruption hits, contracting officers and primes want to know one thing: Can this company still deliver?

That's where resilience becomes a differentiator.

Since COVID, we've been operating in a near-constant state of disruption, without the recovery pauses we once relied on. Events that used to feel like "black swans" now arrive back-to-back, compounding rather than resolving. The "new normal" has federal agencies and primes operating amid workforce volatility, cyber and physical disruptions, supply-chain instability, and increased scrutiny on contractor performance.

While compliance frameworks like CMMC, NIST, and ISO are important, they don't answer the operational question agencies care about most: What happens if something goes wrong tomorrow?

Big primes often answer that with scale. Small businesses must answer it with discipline.

Veteran-owned small businesses don't need 200-page plans or full-time resilience staff. They need the basics done well:

- A short list of critical business functions
- Clear downtime and recovery thresholds
- Simple continuity strategies tied to real operations
- An incident response structure that reflects how the company actually works

In teaming arrangements, this matters. Primes want subcontractors who won't disappear when pressure mounts. Resilient enterprises build trust, and trust wins work.

Veterans understand readiness instinctively. We don't plan because we expect failure. We plan because outcomes depend on it.

Resilience isn't just about anticipating disruption. It's about building the capacity to withstand it and emerge stronger because of it.

As small veteran-owned businesses compete with big primes, resilience isn't merely a cost to absorb. In today's environment, resilience is the new differentiator and the force multiplier that levels the playing field.
